

Cádiz

Districts of Cadiz

La Janda

What was one the largest lake in Spain gives its name to this district of countryside and beaches. We start in Conil de la Frontera, a seafaring village with long beaches and a great tourist atmosphere. Following the coast, we arrive at the Palmar beach and the beaches of Los Caños de Meca, in the borough of Barbate.

A nature reserve known as La Breña y las Marismas del Barbate Nature Park, where the sea meets woodland, with the possibility of diving, especially in the clear waters of the beaches at Zahara de los Atunes.

In the vicinity, E Faro and the cape of Trafalgar, a place for history since 1805, the date of the famous battle in which Admiral Nelson lost his life. Inland, just 9 km from the coast, we find Vejer de la Frontera, located on the top of a hill. Its popular architecture, with its steep, narrow streets and whitewashed arches, reflects the Andalusian Moorish style. It has been declared a historic-artistic complex, as has Alcalá de los Gazules, in the centre of the province, and Medina Sidonia, of very ancient origin, with its Moorish medieval flavour still intact. Its cuisine, especially its confectionary, is exquisite. Following the Bull Route, we arrive in San José del Valle and Paterna de Rivera, the

to the Cadiz Parliament of 1812, the origin of modern Spain. A catamarán crosses the bay every day to connect Cadiz to Puerto de Santa María, the city that was home to Christopher Columbus. It is now one of the most emblematic towns in the area thanks to its cuisine and nightlife, and the added renown of its historic and craftsmanship in the form of leather products and sweet Andalusí confectionery. But our Moorish heritage is mixed here with Roman roads, Christian invasions, legends of highway robbers and the sleepers for a railway that was never built, now used happily by trekkers. The Sierra of Cadiz also houses an abundant archaeological heritage dating back over 250,000 years.

Arcos de Frontera is one of the best known white villages. You only have to see it to understand why it has been classified as a Historic-Artistic Monument. It is followed by Utrique, El Bosque and Prado del Rey, known not only for the beauty of their landscapes but for their local arts and crafts. Algar, Algodonales, El Gastor, Puerto Serrano and and hotel complexes on the coast of Andalusia: Costa Ballena, which spreads through both boroughs. The Chipiona lighthouse is famous for being the tallest in Spain.

The Gibraltar district

This is the southernmost point of the south, where two seas and two continents meet. The landscape is so special that it also contains two nature parks: Los Alcornocales and the El Estrecho nature park. The district is known locally as Campo de Gibraltar and includes the boroughs of Algeciras, Castellar y Jimena de la Frontera, La Línea, Los Barrios, San Roque and Tarifa, a walled-in city of Moorish structure with international renown since windsurfing enthusiasts discovered its beaches. Kite surfing now paints the coast with a multitude of colours.

monumental heritage. Puerto Real is the town founded by the Catholic Kings that has pine trees, beaches and golf courses, and San Fernando is essential if you are interested in naval history and the 1810 to 1812 parliament that passed the first Spanish Constitution.

Further south is Chiclana de la Frontera, with the Novo Sancti Petri estate, renowned in Europe for the quality of its beaches and facilities. Historically speaking, we find the mysteries of the Temple of Hercules and the Atlantid, with characters as important as Hannibal or Roman emperor Julius Caesar. A short way from the coast is Jerez, a city to be enjoyed all year around, with the Royal Andalusian School of Equestrian Art, the speed circuit, the wineries, the La Atalaya theme centre and the town's rich monumental heritage.

Villaluenga, the smallest of these charming villages, form part of the route. Also Benacaz, Bornos, Espera, Villamartin, Torre Alhagime and Olvera, each with its own fiestas, castles and peculiarities. The route enters the Grazalema Nature Reserve, a Biosphere Reserve with species such as the Spanish fir, a relic of the Tertiary Era. The greenery, the wildlife, the position of the rocks and the water have made this park a must for those who enjoy active tourism and rural tourism. Grazalema is another place to be visited, together with Zahara de la Sierra, with one of the most spectacular landscapes in the area. Finally, Alcalá del Valle and, of course, Setenil de las Bodegas, with its spectacular houses carved out of the mountain, following the course of the river.

birthplace of "peteneras" flamenco songs and also famous for its breeders of fighting bulls, and Benalup-Casas Viejas, where we find the cave paintings of Tajo de las Figuras.

The Sierra of Cadiz. White villages

The Sierra of Cadiz spreads to the north of the province in an abrupt, tasty, green and very exciting route: the Route of the White Villages. It tells stories of the daily life of Al-Andalus: the layout of the streets, the economy linked to olive oil production,

Low Guadalquivir

The Guadalquivir river is the protagonist of this district which connects Seville and the sea through Cadiz. On its estuary we find the towns of Sanlúcar de Barrameda, Trebujena, Rota and Chipiona, a land rich in history, wine and flowers.

Sanlúcar de Barrameda is worth special attention. You cannot leave the province of Cadiz without savouring its famous prawns, visiting its "manzanilla" wineries and the horse races on the beach, classified as being of International Tourist Interest. From Tartessus to the boom in colonial trade, the sea made it come alive. One emblematic date in history is 1519 when the first voyage around the world set out from its shores, showing that the earth is round. Near Sanlúcar are three towns closely connected to wine, Trebujena to the north and Rota and Chipiona to the south, as attractive as all seaside towns, where it is worthwhile visiting the fishing pens and one of the most important tourist, residential

Gastronomy

The tasty gastronomy of Cadiz comprises the most appetising dishes of Andalusia. The products of the hills and the sea, washed down with their excellent wines, will turn our trip into an unforgettable experience. The large variety of fish and seafood include the renowned prawns from Sanlúcar, the red tuna from "Almadraba", bream cooked in the style of Rota, gilt head bream cooked in sea salt, cockles with noodles, baby prawn fritters and a long list of dishes which are easier to savour than to number. In the hills, we can enjoy game (deer, wild boar, rabbit, partridge, etc.), hot garlic, Grazalema soup, kidneys cooked in sherry, small "chorizo" sausages from El Bosque, loin in red lard from Vejer and a large number of home-made cheeses.

In Grazalema the factory of handmade blankets stands out and the works in wicker, cane or cattails in Medina Sidonia, Setenil, Bornos or Vejer. Esparto baskets and espadrilles are typical from Torre Alhagime, palm and crochet from Paterna de Rivera, hand-moulded guitars from Algodonales and bagpipes from El Gastor. Arcos and Conil stand out because of their pottery. It is also worth mentioning the country boots from Alcalá de los Gazules and Espera, handmade furniture from Benamahoma and Prado del Rey, and woodworks and mahogany furniture from Sanlúcar de Barrameda.

Arts and Crafts

There are many types of craftworks in the province. The most famous and appreciated ones are: leather products from Utrique and nearby villages which are commercialized by international well-known brands such as Loewe. In Grazalema the factory of handmade blankets stands out and the works in wicker, cane or cattails in Medina Sidonia, Setenil, Bornos or Vejer.

Also the barrel-making workshop, items for wineries, and the saddlery in Jerez, items for horses.

History

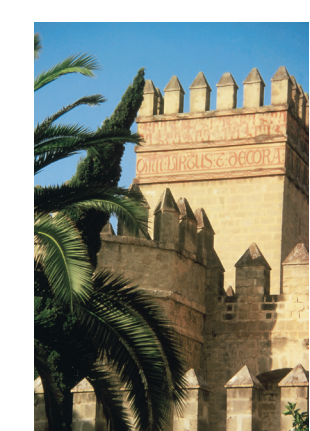

The Phoenicians, Greeks and Romans lived in this province, leaving important testimony of their presence along the entire Cadiz coast.

From the medieval age, there are over 30 castles and fortresses near the beach or with splendid views from the top of the mountains.

On the other hand, a series of historic milestones confirm the close link between Cadiz and the rest of the peninsula and its importance on an international scale: in 711, the defeat of the Visigoths on the Guadalete river enabled the moors to conquer the area, changing the course of history. On three occasions in the 15th century did Columbus's chips leave Cadiz, Sanlúcar de Barrameda and El Puerto de Santa María for the other side of the Atlantic, establishing cultural and emotional relations that continue even today. A few years later, Magallanes left to travel around the world for the first time from Sanlúcar. In 1812, with great international significance, the first Spanish Constitution was approved in Cadiz. This was the carta magna that set the basis for the modern State.

Beneath a clear, blue sky, the province of Cadiz enjoys a warm climate, with a mean annual temperature of 18°C, ranging from 14°C in winter to 22°C in summer, so sunbathing is a possibility all year around. But beaches are not only for sunbathing, but also for sports, for walking and for relaxing. The sun shines 330 days a year and there are more than 3,000 hours of sunlight, so leisure time can be made the most of more than elsewhere. In contrast, the microclimate of the Grazalema massif – where we find the Abies Pinsapo, a relic of the Tertiary Era- has the greatest rainfall in all Spain, so near to the beach and with an incredible mountain landscape. In the south, the wind is the best ally for water sport enthusiasts, with windsurfing and kite surfing some of the most spectacular and colourful examples. From the coast to the very heart of the province, thanks to its climate and layout of the land, travellers will discover magnificent nature areas.

Bay of Cadiz

Beaches, dunes and salt mines comprise the Bay of Cadiz, a sunny natural water park containing Cadiz, San Fernando, Chiclana, Puerto Real, El Puerto de Santa María, Rota and, inland, Jerez de la Frontera. This has always been a land of sailors, legends and famous characters, of battles and love affairs that travelled the world over and brought music, wealth, flavour, a cosmopolitan spirit and the art of living well to the Bay. Street after street, Cadiz itself reveals its history and colonial importance: the city walls of Puerta Tierra, the Latin American plants in the parks and avenues, the cathedral – so exotic – and the pink, pale blue and yellow facades of Campo del Sur, the innumerable watchtowers, the museums and the monument

Cádiz

...“Salty clarity” was how the poet described Roman GADES, the oldest city in Europe. Its peninsular nature does not prevent it from being the capital of a land of frontiers which, from the high peaks of the hills, falls down into the sea. Nature and man, in perfect symbiosis, recreate a diverse landscape, rich in beauty and charm: Spanish firs, Holm oaks, pines, vineyards... and fertile farm land, housing white villages with a splendid architecture and a rich and varied cuisine.

The Mediterranean and the Atlantic surround a coast of 260 kilometres of beaches, from the estuary of the river Guadalquivir to the beaches bordering on the province of Malaga. At the southernmost point of the south, on the tip of Tarifa, the “ocean sea” and the “Mare Nostrum”, blend their waters to join the two continents in sisterhood.
